Start-ups and higher education

Ben Nelson, the founder of Minerva, is a visionary committed to reshaping higher education. Minerva University is dedicated to fostering globally oriented problem-solvers, entrepreneurs, and wise leaders. Their students, future leaders and entrepreneurs from over 100 nations, live and learn together in various culturally vibrant cities worldwide, united by their shared goal of contributing to a safer, more sustainable world. Prior to Minerva, Nelson spent over a decade at Snapfish, aiding its growth from a startup to the world's largest personal publishing service. Before Snapfish, Nelson was President and CEO of Community Ventures. He received a B.S. in Economics from the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School and chaired the Student Committee on Undergraduate Education (SCUE), the university's oldest non-elected student government body.
